

The National Conference for Agricultural Workers Health is the only conference dedicated solely to the health and well-being of America's migratory and seasonal agricultural workers. NACHC sponsors this annual conference to convene migrant health leaders to exchange learning in an effort to improve the overall health and quality of life of agricultural workers and their families.

We commend the AG Worker Access 2020 Campaign, our State and Regional Primary Care Associations, Community and Migrant Health Centers, Health Center Controlled Networks, Cooperative Agreement grantees, the Bureau of Primary Health Care, and many other partners who have embraced and supported the campaign since its inception. These partnerships have enabled the development of more effective outreach, and provided enhanced training and strategies that have increased access to care for our nation's farmworker families. And while we're proud of the ways we've expanded the quality and quantity of services to this community through The Campaign, we know there is so much more to be accomplished.

Join us in "The Mile High City" of Denver, Colorado on May 2-4 for the 2022 Conference for Agricultural Worker Health. Take this opportunity to collaborate with colleagues and identify proven practices and solutions to advance our goal of increased outreach and services to the nation's agricultural workforce.

For exhibitors, this conference provides access to thought leaders in the field of Agricultural Worker Health. These professionals are passionate about the issues and challenges facing this vulnerable population. They bring expertise and are collaborative with others in seeking mutually beneficial solutions.
